127A  African Art I

This course provides an introduction to African art through analysis of African visual culture and symbol systems. It evaluates African art in relation to the history and diversity of the continent and also in relation to perceptions and representation of Africa deriving from its encounter with occidental cultures both in antiquity and from the late 15th century into the contemporary era. African arts deploy sophisticated structures of symbolic communication whose meanings are not exhausted by an appeal to aesthetics defined in terms of European notions of "beauty and ugliness". For this and other reasons, an understanding of African aesthetic forms and structural languages are vital to any comprehension of African culture. This course thus provides a cross-cultural survey of aesthetic conventions and styles of African art using examples drawn from the entire continent Prerequisite: Not open to freshmen. GE: F, NWC.

Irreverence and Iconoclasm
This seminar will focus on questions of defacement and iconoclasm, two issues characterizing many avant-garde movements of the 20th century. Whether attacking artistic conventions or political regimes, art movements such as Dada or Abstract Expressionism could be understood as iconoclastic in nature. However, iconoclasm is not unique to avant-garde movements -- witness the number of works that have been destroyed or suppressed by the State because they are thought to be morally unacceptable or even dangerous. Looking at some key examples across the 20th century, the class will examine the ways in which the "power of images" is understood by both avant-gardes and the regimes they ostensibly threaten.
Requirements: Class participation is essential and attendance mandatory; weekly discussions will focus on readings and writing techniques, with a final paper or project that addresses the themes developed throughout the course.

<td>In this seminar we will concentrate on a central issue of art museums: the permanent collection. We will proceed along two lines of inquiry and method, to arrive at some critical understanding of the ways museum collections shape the canon of art history. Along one path we will look at the historical evolution of collecting and museums, and the development of ideas of connoisseurship, from the nineteenth century to the present. Along the other path, we will go through a series of hands-on (or rather, eyes-on) workshops, looking at various kinds of material and considering questions of technique, conservation, attribution and quality—traditionally the answers that connoisseurship promised the faithful practitioner of this science. The goal of the seminar is three-fold: to give you some practical experience in connoisseurship, to demystify it, and to place it historically within the context of both academic art history and the art museum. We will be working primarily with UCSB’s University Art Museum collections, which have some depth in prints and drawings, but we will also take field trips to the Getty and to LACMA. Approximately half the time of the seminar will be spent in these collections.</td>

Can Culture Count? Episodes from the 1930s in France

This seminar focuses on the strategies developed by competing avant-gardes in the 1930s in France. Of particular interest will be the ways in which various groups and artists -- e.g. Surrealists, Abstractionists, the School of Paris, Picasso and Matisse -- handled a moment of intense political crisis in France and ultimately, throughout Europe as a whole. A key issue to be addressed is the pervasive sense of powerlessness characterizing the period. In particular, the seminar will examine the concept of virility, a recurrent term featured in aesthetic and political discourse of the time. Looking at literature, popular magazines (such as the photojournal Vu), avant-garde publications and imagery, the seminar uses an interdisciplinary approach to understand how, in this critical decade, artists and intellectuals sought to make culture "count" in the formation of political and social structures. Readings will include Dudley Andrew and Steven Ungar's Popular Front Paris and the Poetics of Culture; Michel Leiris's Manhood and a number of other selections from journals, artists and writers of the period. Reading knowledge of French is recommended.

Requirements include: weekly participation and three very short formal analyses of designated images; at the end of the quarter, an oral presentation of research, followed by a written paper of that research. Students will be called upon to act as editors and respondents to one another's work, and to weekly readings.

Prerequisite: Graduate standing.

Spatial Culture: Approaches to the Study of Architecture and Space
Special research in the history of architecture.

This graduate seminar will explore different methodological approaches to the study of architecture, urbanism, and spatial practice. The emphasis will be on post-1800 theorization of history, material culture, and memory as key ingredients for our understanding of spatiality. We will begin with David Harvey's "New Imperialism" (2003) and read seminal works in historical materialism, material culture studies, literary studies, and post-colonial theory.

Requirement: Conscientious and intensive reading, weekly response papers, and dedicated class participation.

Architecture and Printing (c.1530-1850)
The expansion of printing, from Renaissance publications to the 19th-century penny press, has long been recognized as foundational to the modern world. Drawing on critical theory, historical scholarship, and primary sources, this seminar explores how printed texts and images, as well as the larger social transformations wrought by printing, have affected architectural thought and practice. 291B  Gender and Genre: The Nude in French Art:  Solomon-Godeau 1600-1900
From classical antiquity to the present, Western art has been preoccupied with the representation of the human body, whether in idealizing, abstracting or “realist” forms. But inasmuch as the human body—male or female—is dense with associations, always and already inscribed with meanings (both conscious and unconscious), its figural representation is a complex and multivalent affair. It is Western art alone that developed the concept of the nude (as opposed to the depiction of an unclothed or naked body) as a specific type of representation. In this sense, we might think of the nude as the aesthetic, and more or less idealized representation of the human. But its taken-for-granted status tends to make us think of “the nude” as a given, rather than a historically mutable, contested, and indeed, highly charged form of representation.

In this seminar, we will be considering the nature and terms of the nude (male and female) during three hundred years of French art, theory, pedagogy and criticism. In the post-Renaissance European world, it was arguably France that produced the greatest numbers of paintings and sculptures featuring male or female nudes. This was in part the consequence of the “hierarchy of genres,” codified by the Académie Royale des beaux arts (established in 1646) within which history painting occupied the summit. And because this genre required full scale figures, mastery of the nude was a sine qua non for the aspiring artist. Second, the prestige of classical antiquity fostered the emulation of classical art, in which the male nude was a central form. Third, the French state (and church) were major sources of commissions, thus providing opportunities for large-scale figure works. But in the 19th century, even when history and religious art was gradually eclipsed, the nude (primarily the female nude) remained a central motif for artists of all stylistic stripes; realists, romantics, impressionists, symbolists, fauves, etc., etc. Nevertheless, and throughout this lengthy history, the nude was periodically a source of controversy or difficulty, be it on the grounds of “decorum” or “indecency.” Which is to say that Western Christian culture has always had its problems with the body, no matter how elevated or ideal, and these “problems” are as interesting to consider as are its celebrations.

The seminar will thus focus on three aspects of the nude in France: academic theories, Salon criticism, and official dictates about its “proper” representation; the significance of the historical shift from male to female nudes at the beginning of the 19th-century, the “banalization” of the female nude in 19th-century mass culture, and last, the psychoanalytic, social and cultural implications of this most durable form of representation and its relations to [changing] concepts of gender and sexuality.
Requirements for the seminar are reading knowledge of French and the production of a 12-15 page seminar paper at the end of the quarter. After the first few meetings, students are required to give class presentations based on assigned readings. Graduate students from other disciplines are welcome, and may if they wish work with literary or textual sources instead of visual representation. Prerequisites: graduate standing.

"Topics in Photography: Torture and Representation." This seminar will work with the visual archive generated by Abu Ghraib (as well as other American-run prisons abroad) in order to examine some central questions: What are the consequences of making, viewing, and disseminating actual transcriptions of acts of torture? What motivates men and women to engage in acts of torture and photograph themselves in the act? Why and when torture is explicitly eroticized? What are some of the ways by which artists use the imagery of real torture to make their art? How does the visual knowledge of what torture "looks like" intersect with other forbidden knowledges (e.g., pornographic representation)? And finally, does the reproduction (after the fact) of photographs depicting acts of torture (or other depictions of war) animate or deaden ethical response? This course requires weekly readings and discussion, and the writing of a research seminar paper. Prerequisites: Upper-division only. GE: WRT.

Adams
Introduction to art-historical methods, with emphasis on the historical development of current practices, critical theory, debates within the field, and cross-disciplinary dialogues. Building upon the material you cover in Fall quarter, this course "wraps" the readings you have done with an historiographic background to some of the major methods to which you were introduced, and locates them in their larger theoretical contexts. At the same time, we will attend to the application of these methods or approaches. The course emphasizes close analysis of argumentation, and to the ideology or politics of an argument, asking "who is the audience" and "what are the stakes" in the point of view taken by the author? 259D/261A Seminar: 19th-Century Genre Painting in Britain and the United States

This seminar examines the iconography and narrative structures of two schools of genre painting, intimately related but separated by an ocean and increasingly divergent histories. Genre painting, or pictures of scenes of everyday life, was exceptionally popular in the nineteenth-century and yet unlike landscape, still-life, and portraiture it has received little recent scholarly attention.

Asking "What is the relationship between genre painting and the community that consumes it?", we consider the ways narratives and subjects reflect, model and mediate their audiences. The formats, tropes and issues found in British and U.S. genre painting will be looked at against the different national experiences of industrialism, urbanism, empire and political unrest. British and American treatments of civility, race, domesticity and other topics will be compared and analyzed with an eye to understanding how genre painting both models social problems and imagines their possible resolutions. Rather than a simple reflection of everyday life genre painting is an active reshaping of experience, audience, and nation.
The discussion of this body of work requires the development of skills in close looking and analysis of two schools of painting where the likenesses may appear to be as great as the differences, and both must be attended to.

This seminar explores the ways that Japanese books—and foreign publications that appropriated their images—displayed and defined Japanese ‘art.’ We will compare how Japanese and Western print culture presented samplings of Japanese masters’ sketches, disseminated popular iconography, and recorded exhibitions in Japan and abroad during the volatile 19th century. Looking particularly at Korin gafu, Hokusai manga, and printed memorabilia of the world expositions, we will consider issues of reception—such as the ideological underpinnings of the Western discourse on Japanese art. 6DS Survey: History of Art in China

The History of Art in China is a survey course that introduces the major traditions and monuments of Chinese art from Neolithic times to the modern (20th-21st centuries). The course generally follows a chronological trajectory but with a thematic matrix. The first part of the course, from Neolithic to Han (ca. 5000 BC - AD 220) concerns the formation of culture and civilization and covers early pottery and bronze traditions as well as the beginnings of pictorial art. Objects and pictures are placed into their historical, philosophical, and social contexts. The second part of the course focuses on the importation and development of Buddhist art, from ca. AD 200 - 1000. The third part of the course interweaves the painting, calligraphy, and ceramic traditions of imperial China, from the Song dynasty to the near contemporary. Garden design and imperial architecture are also introduced. One of the aspects of the course that will be emphasized is regional diversity and intercultural encounters (India and Central Asia in particular). The title, History of Art in China, as opposed to something like The Arts of China, is intended to convey awareness of the fact art is a conceptual and subjective term and that objects have histories that extend beyond national borders. GE: WRT, NWC, F

This seminar will address the issues of time, temporality, and history, taking into account one or more of the different pressures – from humanism, urbanization, mercantile capitalism, science, the Reformation and Counter-Reformation – that were brought to bear on individual and social conceptions of time, and how these changes and conflicts may have been registered – or ignored through nostalgic archaisms – in Netherlandish and German art, texts, and culture from the late fifteenth through the seventeenth centuries. 282A Seminar: Modernist Structures and Strategies in 20th Century Chinese Art

This seminar will look closely at a select number of Chinese artists primarily active in the second half of the 20th century whose work explore the twin issues of modernity and identity. These artists, who were largely active outside of Mainland China, belong to a second-generation of Chinese modernism, in which fundamental problems regarding the merging of native and Western traditions were heightened by increased contacts between cultures and a growing awareness of distance, difference, and displacement in the post-war world. Centers of activity include Hong Kong (Lui Shou-kuan, Irene Chou, Wucius Wong, Van Lau), Taiwan (Liu Guosong, Chu Ko, Xia Yang, Xiao Qin, Zhu Ming), Paris (Zao Wou-Ki, Zhu Dechun, Zhao Chunxiang) and the States (Zhuang Zhe, Chen Qikuan). Among the topics we will explore are the widespread attraction of Paul Klee’s work to Chinese artists, the application of native signifiers in modern contexts, and the quest for synthesizes. Prerequisite: graduate standing.

140E Period Gardens and Manors of England Homsy

What were 'follies' used for in 18th century England? Why are there Chinese pagodas in England? This course focuses on the gardens of England 1300s through the 1800s. It begins by exploring the relationship of monastery architecture, their gardens and stew ponds and how religious orders preserved our plant knowledge. Students will discover the reasoning behind the creation of landscape movements such as the 'ferme ornée', the 'sublime', and 'picturesque' and how manners, nationalistic ideals, and sensitivity of the day all played a role. Finally, the rich legacy from Victorian and Edwardian garden designs and botanical discoveries will be examined. It is the legacy of this time period, with new botanical discoveries and the modern ideas of William Robinson that has nourished our most recent ideals of beauty. Manor houses from specific time periods and their background will be used to express their relationship to the landscape.
