5A  Introduction to Architecture & Environment (of the Islamic World)  TR  500-615  BUCHANAN 1920  Overton

Architecture is the primeval act through which human beings carve out for themselves a place in nature. Initially a means of survival, place-making has developed throughout history into technically advanced and artistically sophisticated architectural designs that intertwine ever closer the man-made world with the natural one. This course introduces basic architectural construction methods, design strategies, and subject specific terminology, discusses various interpretative concepts, and poses questions after universal fundamentals of the multi-faceted and multi-sensory relationships between man, architecture, and nature.

The History of Art in China is a survey course that introduces the major traditions and monuments of Chinese art from Neolithic times to the modern (20th-21st centuries). The course generally follows a chronological trajectory but with a thematic matrix. The first part of the course, from Neolithic to Han (ca. 5000 BC - AD 220) concerns the formation of culture and civilization and covers early pottery and bronze traditions as well as the beginnings of pictorial art. Objects and pictures are placed into their historical, philosophical, and social contexts. The second part of the course focuses on the importation and development of Buddhist art, from ca. AD 200 - 1000. The third part of the course interweaves the painting, calligraphy, and ceramic traditions of imperial China, from the Song dynasty to the near contemporary. Garden design and imperial architecture are also introduced. One of the aspects of the course that will be emphasized is regional diversity and intercultural encounters (India and Central Asia in particular). The title, History of Art in China, as opposed to something like The Arts of China, is intended to convey awareness of the fact art is a conceptual and subjective term and that objects have histories that extend beyond national borders.

107B  Painting in the 16th-Century Netherlands  TR  200-315  ARTS 1341  Meadow

Prerequisite: not open to freshmen.

Painting of the Low Countries from c. 1500 - c. 1600, placed in its social and cultural contexts. The Low Countries were one of the richest and most culturally sophisticated territories of Europe in the sixteenth century, and a major center of art production. The multicultural, international character of the Low Countries generated exciting new ideas and intense conflict, a situation in which the visual arts played a crucial role. We will focus on the connections among painting, print culture, science, politics, and religion, with a special emphasis on issues of social negotiation and self-fashioning.

111B  Dutch Art in the Age of Rembrandt and Frans Hals. The Birth of a Nation: 1579 - 1648  MW  1100-1215  ARTS 1341  Adams

Prerequisite: one History of Art & Architecture course or equivalent. Not open to freshmen.
The first half of the seventeenth century in Holland, the period from the Union of Utrecht of 1579 and its declaration of independence from Spain, to the recognition of the Northern Netherlands as an independent nation in 1648, was the first part of a century that has come to be known as the Dutch "Golden Age" of Dutch art. This era witnessed the emergence of a Protestant mercantile culture in which the Catholic Church and the hereditary nobility were supplanted by democratic institutions and middle-class merchants as major patrons of the arts. These men and women supported such artists as Rembrandt van Rijn and Frans Hals as well as a host of lesser known masters who created images rooted in everyday life rather than the imaginary religious, historical, and mythological imagery of previous centuries. This course examines the cultural functions of this rich, apparently descriptive imagery as it helped to form the private identities and public ambitions of Europe's first middle-class capitalist society. We examine the aesthetics and content of this imagery through contemporary economic, historic, religious, and literary developments, and the emerging scientific revolution.

The emphasis in this class is upon the social and intellectual issues engaged by Dutch painting: how they participated in the struggle between the values of a new middle-class and capitalist culture in conflict with an older way of life. At the same time, it examines the varieties of art historical methods employed by contemporary scholars, as well as those of the past, to understand these images. The goal of the course is to give students a solid grounding in knowledge about seventeenth century Dutch art and culture, with a focus upon critical analysis of images as well as the structure of arguments that have been made about them. These skills are intended to be ones that you may be able to apply both in other courses, as well as information you encounter and arguments you construct in your daily life.

Prerequisite: one History of Art & Architecture course or equivalent. Not open to freshmen.

This class covers art produced during the second half of the seventeenth century in Holland. This was the period from the recognition of the Northern Netherlands as an independent nation in 1648 to the end of the so-called “Golden Age” with the invasion of the Lowlands by France in 1672. The era witnessed the flowering of a Protestant mercantile culture which rivaled the political and economic power of that of monarchs and aristocrats across Europe. These men and women supported such artists as Rembrandt van Rijn and Jan Vermeer as well as a host of lesser known masters who created images rooted everyday life. This course examines the cultural functions of this rich, apparently descriptive imagery as it helped to form the private identities and public ambitions of Europe's first middle-class capitalist society. We examine the aesthetics and content of this imagery through contemporary economic, historic, religious, and literary developments, and the emerging scientific revolution.

120AA Special Topics in Twentieth-Century Modern Art TR 930-1045 ARTS 1341 Monahan

Prerequisite: not open to freshmen.
May be repeated for credit to a maximum of 12 units provided letter designations are different.
What were the Sixties and what do they mean to us? Hippies, counter-culture, student protests, anti-war movement, pop art, rock music, drugs, and any number of images that come to mind when “the 60s” is mentioned. The period was marked by desire and divisiveness, and this course is designed to discover the important ways in which visual culture of the 1960s shaped both the United States and the United Kingdom.

Topic: War and Trauma in Twentieth Century Art and Visual Culture

Prerequisite: not open to freshmen.
May be repeated for credit to a maximum of 12 units provided letter designations are different.

This course examines war and violence in art from World War I to the 9/11 attacks. Taking into account the works’ formal qualities, as well as their content and immediate context, we will attempt to understand trauma as a radical break with experience that complicates access to history and narrative, raise ethical issues about the aesthetics of violence, and ask whether the affect produced by art can justify the public use of private pain, and in what measure art can become a form of protest or understanding of violence.

127B African Art II: Modern and Contemporary African Art
TR 1230-145 ARTS 1341 Lynch

Prerequisite: not open to freshmen.

This course provides an introduction to Modern and Contemporary African Art through an evaluation of its ideologies, forms and contexts of practice. It seeks a conceptual framework for evaluating modern and contemporary African art that recognizes its unique conceptual/formal structure and also its location within an international discourse of art and visual culture. It focuses on different kinds of artworks produced by African artists in the 20th and early 21st Centuries and how these artists and they have been used to constructed modern, contemporary and African identities. It also investigates the impact of curatorial practices and strategies of new media representation on the location of Africa in Global Contemporary Art.

Topic: Empire, City, and Material Culture

Prerequisite: graduate standing.

Taking various forms of material culture — buildings, landscapes, foodways, and consumer products — as sites of analysis, this seminar will examine the role of colonialism and empire in producing the urban experience. We will read key texts on empire and modern urbanism, attending to those aspects of urban history that we often miss when we see large-scale phenomena such as empires and cities through a macro analytic gaze. We will pay attention to some seemingly small things that might open windows onto larger phenomena.

Prerequisite: upper-division standing.

Introduces students to the field of Classical Archaeology through case studies drawn from all over the ancient world, with an emphasis on the Mediterranean. Explores both the practical methods of archaeology as well as the artifacts that are found and how they are preserved, displayed, and who owns them.

103F  Greek Art and Archaeology  MW  1230-145  ARTS 1341  Moser

Prerequisite: upper-division standing.

Explores the ancient Greek world through art and archaeology — using art objects, architecture, and everyday artifacts to learn about ancient Greek society. Focuses on the history of Greek art, archaeology, and architecture from the Bronze Age through the Hellenistic period, and considers such themes as religion, politics, social status, and urban planning.

Today we are saturated in images of war: on the news, the internet, and in films. What does it mean to be a spectator of such images? What are the cultural politics involved in the production, dissemination, and reception of images that document conflict? How does the type of media in which these images appear shape our perception of truth and reality? This course will situate the viewing of representations of war historically, paying particular attention to the role that different kinds of media play in establishing frames for how war can be understood.

Topic: Johannes Vermeer: The Art Behind the Art

Prerequisite: upper-division standing.

Vermeer painted only 45 to 50 paintings over the course of his life, 34 of which survive. These provide an unparalleled opportunity to examine in depth his complete surviving oeuvre in themes from ranging from the almost exclusive female subject matter to Vermeer’s biography. The course examines Vermeer’s paintings both as material objects and as visual images, specifically how the artist created what have been described as “stilled lives.” from the controversies that have arisen over his optical effects and possible use of the camera obscura raised most recently by David Hockney to his reputation from works passing under the names of other artists through his rediscovery and celebration in novel and movie. Finally, we locate his work in the context of life in Delft in the third quarter of the seventeenth century, patronage and the market, his predecessors, contemporaries, and the influence he has had on later artists.

Topic: Radical Bodies and the 1960s

Prerequisite: upper-division standing.
May be repeated for credit to a maximum of 8 units with different topic. Open only to History of Art & Architecture majors during Pass 1.

This seminar will use the exhibition, Radical Bodies: Anna Halprin, Simone Forti, and Yvonne Rainer in California and New York 1955-1972, to explore three issues. First, the specific role of dance in the radicalization and revolution in art making in the 1960s, across all media. Second, the consequence of the radicalized body for art making in the 1960s. And finally, how we might go about recovering the first responses to this explosion of new ideas and inter-media, so as to escape the subsequent canonization of certain figures and movements and open up this era for new scholarship.
In August 1960, on her dance deck north of San Francisco, Anna Halprin taught Simone Forti and Yvonne Rainer, along with a dozen other students, new ideas of improvisation around tasks, everyday movement, sound and the environment. Forti and Rainer took these ideas with them back to New York, and out of this encounter emerged Judson Dance Theater and other significant interventions in dance, the visual arts and music. The canonical version of this history begins in New York, and on the visual art side, is largely limited to a few, male artists. The history Radical Bodies tells starts in California, and insists on the importance of the fact that the players are women and Jewish.

How can we take this revisionary history and rethink Pop, Minimalism, Happenings, Performance, Conceptual art and all the other “movements” that occurred in this decade? How does dance history in particular force us to rethink the 1960s? That is what I would like us to consider in the seminar.

This seminar examines the dual roles of presence and absence, of the tangible and the intangible, in the modern museum. Focusing on current debates in memory studies, material culture studies, and heritage studies, this seminar seeks to consider how museums and related institutions function within a variety of social and political contexts. Our case studies — including not just art museums but also police museums, indigenous museums, urban archaeological sites of slavery, memorials of trauma — will allow for an examination of the vast terrain of what museums have become. We will examine the complexities of the objects, spaces, and displays that museums contain, and the artworks they generate. Of particular interest is how museums generate the lived and imagined communities with which they interact. In this seminar, we will seek to ground our understanding both of the museum as an institution within a philosophy and epistemology of museums, and reflect on the position of museum studies within the discipline of art history.

Topic: Contemporary Art Criticism
Prerequisite: graduate standing.

In a contemporary art world increasingly dependent upon conceptually-driven and text-based works of art, how does writing clarify, obscure, or become a work of art itself? What is the role of the critic in mediating this kind of writing? What are the responsibilities of the artist as an interpreter of ideas? As these roles have increasingly merged, this reading-intensive course will actively explore the history of post-1960s criticism through primary source texts as it emerged alongside the academic discipline of contemporary art history.

The central theme will concern how understandings of architecture’s function and meaning shifted with the long emergence of a mass public. Other themes will include the emergence of new materials and technologies and the impact of imperialism and colonialism.

This course provides a general introduction to the indigenous and contemporary arts of Africa, Oceania, and Native North America. In these vast locales of human culture, we will study how art provides concrete conceptual and visual structures around which social, political, cultural aesthetic and ritual institutions are constructed. The art object, imbued with several meanings, is essential to the human lifecycle, charged with political, economic and spiritual connotations and instrumental to rituals of birth, death and all the stages of transition in between. In such contexts, art operates within spaces of performance and individual art objects are imbued with multiple meanings. We will investigate the historical nature of different art traditions in these cultures and evaluate specific art forms like painting, sculpture, mural painting, textiles and decorative arts, body adornment, masquerade performances, royal/leadership arts, and sacred, secular and vernacular architecture.

6H  Survey: The Arts of Precolumbian America  MW  200-315  BUCHANAN 1930  Spivak

Visual Culture or "Art," that is to say architecture, sculpture and mural painting as well as textiles, metallurgy and ceramics, played a central and powerful role within the Precolumbian civilizations that produced them. Visual messages were encoded in the ways cities were built, stone and wood were carved, and leaders had themselves ornamented and buried. Using interdisciplinary methods, our goal will be to reconstruct (to the degree that is possible), the meaning and function of the visual arts in multiple, interlocking economic, political and sacred spheres. As an introduction to the ancient Americas, this course will focus on seven major cultures in Mesoamerica (Olmec, Teotihuacan, Maya, Aztec) and Andean South America (Chavín, Moche, and Inka).

105O  The Global Middle Ages: Visual and Cultural Encounters in the Medieval Mediterranean  TR  930-1045  ARTS 1341  Badamo

Prerequisite: upper-division standing.

Focusing on the Mediterranean, this course considers visual manifestations of exchange. Its goal is to examine the complexity of religious, political, and visual interactions in the Middle Ages, a period that brought together diverse religious communities, generating both social frictions and new cultural forms. Students will study the dynamic interplay among Christian, Jewish, and Islamic visual cultures as they developed and coalesced through commerce, gift exchange, the reinterpretation of pre-existing forms, and the reuse of objects and spaces.

105P  Introduction to Medieval Art and Architecture  TR  200-315  ARTS 1341  Badamo

Prerequisite: upper-division standing.

This course explores the soaring cathedrals, monstrous sculptures, and marvelous images that inspired The Lord of the Rings and Game of Thrones. Beginning with the fourth-century rise of Christian images and ending with the advent of print, it traces how images developed new roles — and reinvented old ones — over the course of the Middle Ages. Investigating architecture, sculpture, and manuscripts in their historical contexts, it asks why medieval objects look the way they do and how viewers saw them.

This class will do close readings of manga (cartoons/comics/graphic novels by Japanese), considering examples from the 19th century to the present. We will analyze the visual design, narrative progression, and the word and image relationship. Historically, we will think about the shifting definition of manga through time and consider how politics, changing media, and globalization played a role in determining the form. Student discussion, presentations, and a paper required.

Previous knowledge of manga is welcomed (or more broadly Japan and Japanese). Counts for credit in EALCS.

From the first moment of contact between Amerindians and Europeans in 1500 through the end of the colonial regime in 1822, Brazil’s nature has been variously seen as Amazonian paradise, as a resource-rich Atlantic forest, as “green hell.” Through such media as earthworks, featherwork, body arts, performance, landscape painting, sculpture, and architecture, this course examines the mediation of art and nature in Colonial Brazil. We will consider how this intersection of the cultural and the natural have shaped not only our understanding of Colonial Brazil, but have had a profound impact on eco- and ethno-political debates today.

185TC Special Topics in Art History   TR  330-445   ARTS 2622   Buono
Topic: Transoceanic Visions: Art of the Portuguese Global Empire
Prerequisite: not open to freshmen.
May be repeated for credit to a maximum of 12 units provided letter designations are different.

In the early-modern period, Portugal launched the world's first global empire, eventually encompassing West and East Africa, Brazil, India, Sri Lanka, China and Japan. Works of art (including architecture, painting, sculpture, printed images, maps and ceramics) and technological innovations (ship construction, navigational technology, printing) were crucial elements in constructing this new Lusophone, or Portuguese-speaking, World. This course explores the role that art played in projecting power, shaping identities, and both interlinking and transforming entire cultures and societies. We will conclude the course by briefly examining how artists from the many former colonies of Portugal use that artistic heritage to address the impact of globalism today.

296A  Reading Critical Theory and the Visual Arts  M  1100-150  ARTS 2622  Spieker
     Topic: Art and Literature and the Object, from 1960 to the Present

Prerequisite: graduate standing.

Same as course GER 270 and C LIT 252.

My seminar looks at post-1960 art and literature that eschews or even destroys objects — art that minimizes objecthood in favor of linguistic elaboration and/or performance or dance — from a decentered perspective. Taking its cue from the 1999 exhibition Global Conceptualism at the Queens Museum, we will deliberately approach such practices from the global margins — from Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union/Russia to Latin America, Japan, the USA and Western Europe — assuming, with Luis Camnitzer, that each of these regions functioned “according to their own clock.” What ties these practices together, regardless of their heterogeneous regional origins, is the idea of dematerialization or de-objectification: the replacement of the aesthetic/consumer object with words, narrative, performance, or dance. The seminar should appeal to interested students in Comparative Literature, Art History, Art, and generally speaking, those interested in aesthetic ideas and the history of art and literature from the 1960s to the present.

Prerequisite: not open to freshmen.

In the sixteenth century, wealthy merchants and powerful princes in Europe began assembling vast collections that aspired to contain all possible knowledge of all possible things. From these remarkably diverse collections — called Kunst- and Wunderkammern (German), studioli (Italian), and curiosity cabinets (English) — arose our modern museums of art, science, history and technology, as well as modern research collections in universities.
