6A  Art Survey I: Ancient - Medieval  TR  930-1045  ONLINE  Moser/Thomas

This online course—presented as a narrative-driven adventure game—will introduce students to the art and archaeology of Rome, with assignments that focus on writing and the research process. Students (players) will be asked to determine whether or not an ancient statue from a prestigious American museum should remain in the US or be sent back to Italy.

Throughout the course, students (players) will excavate artifacts at a digital dig site, visit museums, explore Roman monuments, and navigate the shadowy world of the tombolari (tomb robbers) and mafia-run black market for antiquities. Shorter, weekly writing assignments in different genres will build up to a final research paper with accompanying video presentation.

6E  Survey: Arts of Africa, Oceania, and Native North America  MW  930-1045  ONLINE  Salami

This course provides a general introduction to the indigenous and contemporary arts of Africa, Oceania, and Native North America. In these vast locales of human culture, we will study how art provides concrete conceptual and visual structures around which social, political, cultural aesthetic and ritual institutions are constructed. The art object, imbued with several meanings, is essential to the human lifecycle, charged with political, economic and spiritual connotations and instrumental to rituals of birth, death and all the stages of transition in between. In such contexts, art operates within spaces of performance and individual art objects are imbued with multiple meanings. We will investigate the historical nature of different art traditions in these cultures and evaluate specific art forms like painting, sculpture, mural painting, textiles and decorative arts, body adornment, masquerade performances, royal/leadership arts, and sacred, secular and vernacular architecture.

GE: AREA F, WORLD CULTURES
ENROLLMENT BY DISCUSSION SECTION

This course offers a wide-ranging introduction to architecture and urban design from the earliest human constructions to the middle of the 20th century. The focus is decidedly global in the first half of the course, and more European in the second half. Students will encounter a variety of buildings and cities, but also different ways of understanding and studying them. Student writing assignments will involve the analysis of local architecture and town planning.

111B Dutch Art in the Age of Rembrandt and Frans Hals. The Birth of a Nation: 1579-1648  TR  330-445  ONLINE  Adams

Prerequisite: one History of Art & Architecture course or equivalent. Not open to freshmen.

The first half of the seventeenth century in Holland, the period from the Union of Utrecht of 1579 and its declaration of independence from Spain, to the recognition of the Northern Netherlands as an independent nation in 1648, was the first part of a century that has come to be known as the Dutch "Golden Age" of Dutch art. This era witnessed the emergence of a Protestant mercantile culture in which the Catholic Church and the hereditary nobility were supplanted by democratic institutions and middle-class merchants as major patrons of the arts. These men and women supported such artists as Rembrandt van Rijn and Frans Hals as well as a host of lesser known masters who created images rooted in everyday life rather than the imaginary religious, historical, and mythological imagery of previous centuries. This course examines the cultural functions of this rich, apparently descriptive imagery as it helped to form the private identities and public ambitions of Europe's first middle-class capitalist society. We examine the aesthetics and content of this imagery through contemporary economic, historic, religious, and literary developments, and the emerging scientific revolution.

The emphasis in this class is upon the social and intellectual issues engaged by Dutch painting: how they participated in the struggle between the values of a new middle-class and capitalist culture in conflict with an older way of life. At the same time, it examines the varieties of art historical methods employed by contemporary scholars, as well as those of the past, to understand these images. The goal of the course is to give students a solid grounding in knowledge about seventeenth century Dutch art and culture, with a focus upon critical analysis of images as well as the structure of arguments that have been made about them. These skills are intended to be ones that you may be able to apply both in other courses, as well as information you encounter and arguments you construct in your daily life.

131CM Art of Colonial Mexico  TR 1100-1215 ONLINE  Caplan
Prerequisite: not open to freshmen.

This lecture course examines the art of colonial Mexico in its major spaces of production: missions, metropolitan churches, colonial cities, indigenous communities, and arenas of global exchange. We will discuss a range of art media, including architecture, painting, public festivals, manuscripts, featherworks, and talavera. We will also consider how art production in these varied spaces came to form an idea of colonial Mexican art.

136O Sustainable Architecture: History and Aesthetics  MW 1100-1215 ONLINE  Welter
[cross-listed with ENV S 136O]
Prerequisite: not open to freshmen.

The course examines the history of environmentally sound building practices that have existed for centuries in traditional architecture and have been theorized as so-called “sustainable” architecture from the 20th century onward.
The critical analysis of the course emphasizes the history of and changing approaches to this kind of architecture, including recent examples. The course’s scope is global, yet as theories of sustainable architecture have historically emerged in the Western world, the latter is of focus in this historically oriented course.

Students commit to attend lectures, weekly quizzes, mid-term and final exams.

257A Topics in Seventeenth-Century European Art  W 1200-250 ONLINE Adams

Prerequisite: graduate standing.

This course examines the impact of visual imagery upon protest movements, across European nations and their colonies, in the Early Modern Period. As powerful political tools, images create communities of belonging and exclusion. We investigate the role of class, gender, and race in their participants in protests that include political rebellion and religious conflict to food riots, witch hunts, and uprisings from students to slaves; and examine cultural responses, particularly erasures, in the creation of communities of belonging and exclusion. Because much of this imagery was disseminated through prints, this course also examines the conditions of publication and their dissemination. To help us further understand the history and culture behind these protests, the course may invite to our discussions, where possible, guest historians who have worked in this area. As a final project, students will collectively mount an on-line exhibition.

263 Topics in Contemporary Art  F 200-450 ONLINE Sorkin
   Topic: Alchemy, Magic, and Spirituality

Prerequisite: graduate standing.

This thematic course will consider votive practices; devotional objects and relics, community belief systems; theories of magic; the crisis of symbols and spirituality; primitivism, ritual, and embodied knowledge in historical conceptions of visual thinking. We will consider colonial and post-colonial cultural moments of the symbolic, the mythical, the spiritual.
265  Topics in Architectural History & Urbanism  R  300-550 ONLINE  Wittman
Topic: Romanticism, historicism, and architecture in Europe (c.1800 - c. 1850)

Prerequisite: graduate standing.

Popular textbooks will tell you that neoclassical architecture gave way between 1800 and 1850 to a Romantic eclecticism that manifested itself in a variety of stylistic revivals. Such an account is problematic on a host of counts. This course proposes a more sophisticated inquiry that considers the development of architecture and theory from a cultural, political, and intellectual-history perspective. Our focus will be on France, England, the German speaking lands, and Italy. Questions to be (re)considered include: the status of the classical tradition c.1800; the meaning(s) of Romanticism; historicism and its implications; and the relationship of religion, nationalism, and modernity during this period.

Visual Culture or "Art," that is to say architecture, sculpture and mural painting as well as textiles, metallurgy and ceramics, played a central and powerful role within the Precolumbian civilizations that produced them. Visual messages were encoded in the ways cities were built, stone and wood were carved, and leaders had themselves ornamented and buried. Using interdisciplinary methods, our goal will be to reconstruct (to the degree that is possible), the meaning and function of the visual arts in multiple, interlocking economic, political and sacred spheres. As an introduction to the ancient Americas, this course will focus on seven major cultures in Mesoamerica (Olmec, Teotihuacan, Maya, Aztec) and Andean South America (Chavin, Moche, and Inka).

This class covers art produced during the second half of the seventeenth century in Holland. This was the period from the recognition of the Northern Netherlands as an independent nation in 1648 to the end of the so-called “Golden Age” with the invasion of the Lowlands by France in 1672. The era witnessed the flowering of a Protestant mercantile culture which rivaled the political and economic power of that of monarchs and aristocrats across Europe. These men and women supported such artists as Rembrandt van Rijn and Jan Vermeer as well as a host of lesser known masters who created images rooted everyday life. This course examines the cultural functions of this rich, apparently descriptive imagery as it helped to form the private identities and public ambitions of Europe's first middle-class capitalist society. We examine the aesthetics and content of this

[cross-listed with CHIN 134K]
HAA Course Archive: 2020-2021

Prerequisite: not open to freshmen. Students need to have been introduced to the Chinese writing system, whether through heritage or language instruction (Chinese or Japanese).

The course examines the different scripts in historical context, surveys some of the significant movements and artists, and considers the ideas and theories that have enriched and elevated the art of writing to elite status in China. It will be taught as a combination of online asynchronous short lectures and synchronous group meetings that will involve student presentations and discussion. The discussions will be based on readings together with close visual analysis utilizing digital imagery. The final grade will be based on a final project (oral report and research paper on a chosen work of calligraphy) together with student participation and reading comprehension tests. This is a multidimensional course with the intention of introducing students to the principles and history of one of the greatest arts in Asia. It is not a studio course—we will not be practicing the writing of calligraphy—but we will learn how to appreciate the many different aspects of calligraphy and its important role in the formation of Chinese culture.

Important Note: Reading knowledge of Chinese is not necessary (assigned readings will all be in English), but the course is only open to students who have previously been introduced to Chinese characters. This can be very rudimentary, such as through an introductory language course (Chinese or Japanese) or perhaps through heritage learning. Please contact Professor Sturman if you are uncertain if the course suits your capabilities: sturman@ucsb.edu.

5A  Introduction to Architecture & Environment  TR 500-615  SYNCHRONOUS & ASYNCHRONOUS  Chattopadhyay

Architecture is an act of place-making through which humans have constructed their relation with nature. This course introduces the history of these strategies of place-making, interpretative concepts, and discipline-specific terminology in order to develop a critical understanding of the relationship between nature and built form.

The History of Art in China is a survey course that introduces the major traditions and monuments of Chinese art from Neolithic times to the modern (20th-21st centuries). The course generally follows a chronological trajectory but with a thematic matrix. The first part of the course, from Neolithic to Han (ca. 5000 BC - AD 220) concerns the formation of culture and civilization and covers early pottery and bronze traditions as well as the beginnings of pictorial art. Objects and pictures are placed into their historical, philosophical, and social contexts. The second part of the course focuses on the importation and development of Buddhist art, from ca. AD 200 - 1000. The third part of the course interweaves the painting, calligraphy, and ceramic traditions of imperial China, from the Song dynasty to the near contemporary. Garden design and imperial architecture are also introduced. One of the aspects of the course that will be emphasized is regional diversity and intercultural encounters (India and Central Asia in particular). The title, History of Art in China, as opposed to something like The Arts of China, is intended to convey awareness of the fact art is a conceptual and subjective term and that objects have histories that extend beyond national borders.

105Q Art and War MW 1100-1215 ONLINE Badamo

Prerequisite: not open to freshmen.

We often think about art as a bridge between cultures and look to masterpieces like the Sistine Chapel as the height of a nation's cultural achievements. But during times of war, art can become military targets and destroyed, or used to create enemies. Conversely, art has been employed to resist political establishments, critique violence, and provide therapy for veterans. Drawing examples from different time periods, this course investigates the myriad ways art has been used - and abused - during military conflict.

This course takes seriously Susan Sontag's question "is it possible to be educated by photography?" In doing so, it will explore photography's role as a record, document, and evidence; and as a visual argument. Focusing on the mid-19th century to the present-day, it will address photographic representations of US western expansion, war, violence, poverty, politics, and national and global events. Throughout the course, we ask how and why we look to documentary photography as a way of understanding the past and present and what constitutes photographic knowledge?

Topic: The Americas on Display

Recommended Preparation: ARTHI 5B.
Prerequisite: Designed for majors.

The Americas on Display explores the history of art produced in Latin America since the beginning of the twentieth century as has been publicly displayed for museum visitors. Examining the museum’s engagement with history, we will explore curatorial strategies for telling stories through art objects. By asking how selected artists and artworks give account of colonial and de-colonial processes, in this course we will examine how the exhibition of art objects and images, at specific places and in particular times, have consolidated what is today recognized as the art of the Americas.

Topic: Art and Animate Matter: Visual Culture in the Classic Maya World

Prerequisite: upper-division standing.
May be repeated for credit to a maximum of 8 units with different topic. Open only to History of Art & Architecture majors during Pass 1.

From AD 250 until 850 the Maya of the Yucatan peninsula developed one of the world’s great civilizations, with a sophisticated writing system, urban dwellings, and courtly society. Over the last few decades, the decipherment of Maya script has advanced considerably, presenting access to past mentalities that inform us of their ideas and relationships with the material world. In this seminar, we will integrate these lines of evidence into art historical frameworks. Offering a powerful complement and counterpoint to archaeological data, we will situate cultural logics, resource relationships, and embodied or layered meanings within our interpretations of Classic Maya visual culture.

186RS/282A Seminar in Chinese Art R 400-650 SYNCHRONOUS Sturman
Topic: Trauma and Memory—Art after Dynastic Collapse

Prerequisite: upper-division standing.
Open only to History of Art & Architecture majors during Pass 1.

The seminar will examine painting produced following the collapse of the Ming dynasty in 1644 and during the slow consolidation of power by the Manchus in the latter half of the seventeenth century. Recognizing that outside the simplistic and monolithic category of allegiance existed a large gray zone of emotional and operative responses, we will look to see how painters utilized their craft to voice identity and forge meaning. China’s seventeenth century is an exceptionally rich period for Chinese painting, mirroring the complexity and drama of its history. We will examine a number of the most renowned artists, including Chen Hongshou 陳洪綬 (1598-1652), Gong Xian 龔賢 (1618-1689), Xiang Shengmo 項聖謨 (1597-1658), and Bada Shanren 八大山人 (1626-1705) to understand how irony, alienation, wit and humor could be employed through word and image to mask or channel emotion.

There are no prerequisites for the seminar, though background knowledge of Chinese art would be helpful. There will be weekly readings and discussion accompanied by close looking and analysis. Students will work on a final project for a paper and presentation.

   Topic: Building the Modern World

Prerequisite: upper-division standing.
May be repeated for credit to a maximum of 8 units. Open only to History of Art & Architecture majors during Pass 1.

Students in this undergraduate seminar will study the architecture of the long nineteenth century by working on a digital project: Building the Modern World Keywords. The long nineteenth century was foundational to the modern world. Colonialism, long-distance trade, capitalism, slavery, plantation economy, and the industrial revolution connected distant parts of the world, wreaked havoc, destroyed landscapes as well as economies and livelihoods, generated new ways of thinking about buildings, cities and landscapes, and gave rise to new spaces, new technologies and new publics. New building types such as the railway station and tall office building were created. A host of terms from slum to City Beautiful were coined during this time, and other terms given a new turn to describe and comprehend the emergence of new social and spatial relations. Students will work individually and in groups and learn how to conduct research, write keywords, select appropriate visual and media content to accompany each keyword, and publish on a digital platform.

This course explores the history of modern and contemporary art by tracing watershed exhibitions—the public exposition of artists, artworks, and ideas—that have taken place in the Americas. The exhibitions include both state-sponsored and privately-organized events for the display of artistic objects produced around the globe and presented for local audiences, and enable us to examine a range of historical, theoretical, and practical issues with which the field of Museum Studies is engaged. What was exhibited? Where? And for whom? These questions will guide our conversations about the Week of Modern Art in Brazil in 1922, the Havana Biennial in Cuba in 1993, and PST: Los Angeles/Latin America in 2017, among other art exhibitions.

253D   Topics in Medieval Architecture & Sculpture   M   200-450   SYNCHRONOUS   Badamo
   Topic: Living Monuments

Prerequisite: graduate standing.

Over the past few decades, the investigation of premodern monuments has evolved to consider the dynamic nature of sites and spaces. Scholars no longer treat buildings as static examples of architectural types, frozen in time at their moment of creation. Instead, they study buildings over the longue durée, beginning with the assumption that buildings exist in a continual state of creation – transformed through modern preservation, interaction with broader environments, and user engagement.
This seminar will provide a selective survey of new approaches to premodern architecture. It begins with an investigation of issues around historic preservation (the creation of the historic monument; the politics of nostalgia; ruins and modernity), then moves onto methods for historicizing and analyzing premodern sites. We will consider buildings in their broader environments (soundscapes, sightlines), the activation of architecture by users (graffiti, rituals), the gendering of spaces, and the use of architecture for mediating relationships between ethnic majorities and minorities. These topics will necessarily touch on questions of racism, colonialism, and non-western knowledge. Readings will include modern theory, art historical studies, and works from related disciplines. Specific case studies will be pulled from premodern Eurasia.

Rather than writing a traditional research paper, students will create a project proposal/prospectus based on a topic of your choosing. Students are encouraged to select a topic from their own area, using the methodologies and issues investigated in this course.

Topic: Mexican Manuscripts, Chicanx Codices

Prerequisite: graduate standing.

Taught with an upcoming exhibition by Sandy Rodriguez at the AD&A Museum, this graduate seminar looks at Mexican manuscript traditions with a transhistorical and transnational lens. Putting the work of Rodriguez and select Chicanx artists into conversation with 15th–16th century Mexican manuscripts, we will examine how contemporary works provide situated understandings of major themes, including Indigenous knowledge, colonialism, borders, ethnobotany, and materiality. We will also foreground Chicanx artists’ use of this history as a source of knowledge and power in confronting modern issues. Students’ final project will be interpretive texts to be featured in the exhibition.

Architecture is the primeval act through which human beings carve out for themselves a place in nature. Initially a means of survival, place-making has developed throughout history into technically advanced and artistically sophisticated architectural designs that intertwine ever closer the man-made world with the natural one. This course introduces basic architectural construction methods, design strategies, and subject specific terminology, discusses various interpretative concepts, and poses questions after universal fundamentals of the multi-faceted and multi-sensory relationships between man, architecture, and nature.

6E Survey: Arts of Africa, Oceania, and Native North America (Session B)  MTWR  930-1050  SYNCHRONOUS  Ogbechie

This course provides a general introduction to the indigenous and contemporary arts of Africa, Oceania, and Native North America. In these vast locales of human culture, we will study how art provides concrete conceptual and visual structures around which social, political, cultural aesthetic and ritual institutions are constructed. The art object, imbued with several meanings, is essential to the human lifecycle, charged with political, economic and spiritual connotations and instrumental to rituals of birth, death and all the stages of transition in between. In such contexts, art operates within spaces of performance and individual art objects are imbued with multiple meanings. We will investigate the historical nature of different art traditions in these cultures and evaluate specific art forms like painting, sculpture, mural painting, textiles and decorative arts, body adornment, masquerade performances, royal/leadership arts, and sacred, secular and vernacular architecture.

This survey examines the art and architecture of the lands under Islamic rule from the 7th to 17th centuries. This course covers various geographies stretching from Spain to India and begins with the emergence of early Islamic art and continues chronologically to include the establishment of three early modern Islamic empires. In this course, students will examine various forms of artistic productions and cultural heritage including the built environment, everyday and ritualistic objects, architectural monuments, paintings, calligraphy, and ceramics. Students will get acquainted with the major artworks and material culture of each historical period. Emphasis will be placed on the contextualization of each artwork in its political, geographical, economic, social, aesthetic, religious, and practical context. The objective of this course is to familiarize students with a variety of art forms and artistic styles that emerged from various geographies and cultural milieus under the overarching category of Islamic art. Students will observe the continuity and mutability of artistic forms through social, political, and cultural perspectives, moving beyond the religious connotations.

SYNCHRONOUS & ASYNCHRONOUS  Meadow

Prerequisite: not open to freshmen.

In the sixteenth century, wealthy merchants and powerful princes in Europe began assembling vast collections that aspired to contain all possible knowledge of all possible things. From these remarkably diverse collections—called Kunst- and Wunderkammern (German), studioli (Italian), and curiosity cabinets (English)—arose our modern museums of art, science, history and technology, as well as modern research collections in universities. This course explores these fascinating collections, the purposes that they served and the circumstances in which they were created.
